Louis Browns beat the Indians again. The once genial countenance of Col. Tillinghast L'Hommedieu Huston remained a carven, tragic mask, while Col. Ruppert. in his country estate on the upper Hudson, sat beneath a weeping willow tree listening for a noise from the west that would sound like the St. Louis Browns cracking.

The Yanks first pounded John Picus Quinn, the venerable Polish Hibernian spitballer, whose salivary glands used to work for the Yanks, and later the youthful Mr. Fullerton, who, it is said, is a grandchild of the noted author. Hughey Fullerton. The net result of the poundings was mine runs for the Yanks to two for the Red Sox, one of these being a gift from Babe Ruth.

The once genial countenance of Col. afternoon was a stroke of good fortune or hard luck for the Giants. Up to the fourth inning Bad Bill Fleischman, the hermit of the bull pen, was sitting in his accustomed place brooding over the baseball situation in general. While the famous misanthrope was glaring toward the umpire behind the plate nine Yankee ball players and seven members of the Red Sox came out of their respective dugouts and trooped down toward the hermit's solitary pasture.

Mr. Fielschman seeing what looked like a lot of visitors perked up no little. I'll is mighty sweet of you boys to come out here to talk to me," he said.

"Huh," said Waite Hoyt, "we didn't come out here to see nobody. That guy Evans chased us all out." Whereupon the lips of Mr. Fleischman were clamped tight again and the hermit of the buil pen became more morose than ever. He is doomed to sit in this spot like the Lady of Shalot until the end of the current season, after which it is presumed that he will again be permitted to hold communion with his kind.

son Shawkey, Bob the Goo, worked for the Yank's wearing a conventional undershirt instead of the famous flaming shirt with which he is wont to dazzle opposing batters. Evidently he held the Red Sox clouters in such slight esteem that he did not deem it necessary to don the red shirt for them.

In the fourth inning shortly after the non-combatant players had been berded out to the hermit's pasture in the bull pen the Yanks got something of a shock when Shawkey paused as he was about to heave one to Derrill Pratt. Mr. Shawkey had sustained a sudden kink in the soupbone and dropping the ball preceded to massage himself vigorensly. Miller Huggins peered anxiously from the dugout and Col. Tillinghast L'Hommedieu Huston utered a mean of anguish. The whisper went through the stands, "Something is loose with Shawkey's soupbone." Strong men paled and bulletins were prepared to be sent to the end of the earth announcing the fact that a permanent kink had developed in the soupbone of Mr. Robert Shawkey. But suddenly Mr. Shawkey waved his left arm reassuringly. The kink had gone from the soupbone and all was well. A sigh of relief stirred the humid air. Mr. Shawkey's soupbone will be ready for the crucialest of the crucial series at St. Louis.

Customers Are Scarce.

After the double header crowd of the previous day the customers yesterday ers comparatively scarce. Conse-cently the Yanks who looked so sad efere the big crowd looked a triffe fore like pennant winners, especially umping Joseph Dugan, who smacked both Boston pitchers with vim and rigor. He greeted young Mr. Fullerton with a smash into the left field bleachwith a smash into the left field bleachers for a home run. Pipp also was slugging. Also Mr. Ruth, though he did not pole out a home run. It must be added more in anger than in sorrow, however, that the fielding of Mr. Ruth was as that of a corpulent cow trying to run down a buttlefly.

The troubles of John Picus Quinn, the venerable Polish Hibernian, started in the third inning with two out. With two out Dugan hoisted a Texas Leaguer to right for a two bagger. Mr. Quinn looked once at Ruth and purposely pitched him four very wide once. Pipp singled to left scoring Dugan, and Schang slashed a two bagger along the right foul line, bringing home Ruth and Pipp. The Red Sox got their first run in

The Red Sox got their first run in the fourth inning when Shawkey's soup-bone started to creak. Miller got a single and with two out scored on a two bagger to right center by Harris. The Yanks accumulated two more in the fifth. Dugan, continuing his batting spree, singled and again Ruth got his base on balls. Pipp, the driver scored Dugan with a single and Ruth came home on Schang's out. They will be calling that veteran Yank first baseman Pipp the Pincher because the young man is beginning to sock them when they are most needed.

Dugan Chastizes Fullerton.

Dugan Chastizes Fullerton.

Mr. Fullerton came in to start the seventh and was smacked for a home run by Dugan, which was hardly an auspicious start. Singles by Ruth and Pipp and a sacrifice fly by Meusel brought in another run. In the eighth Scott got a two bagger and took third on Shawkey's sacrifice. Witt got a base on balls and Dugan socked a single through the box scoring Scott. Ruth heat a hit to second and filled the bases. This annoyed young Mr. Fullerton, so that he passed Pipp, the Pincher, and forced in a run.

The run in the ninth inning was presented to the Sox by Mr. Babe Ruth. Miller hit a mere single to right field and the ball escaped the languid grasp of the King of Swat. It rolled down toward the bull pen where the hermit was glowering among the ball players. Buth started after it, but quickly slowed down to a walk. It seemed that he was saying to himself. "It would be ridiculous for a great big fellow like me to be running after a little ball like that." But by the time Ruth reached the fence where the ball was lying Miller was home.

THE LISTENING POST

BY WALTER TRUMBULL Copyright, 1923, by THE NEW YORK HEBALD.

Some day we shall find the time Just to laugh and play, Heedless of the hours which chime; Some day.

Some day we shall grow the heart To put fear away, Act a little braver part; Some day.

Some day we shall see the gleams From the turrets gay. Find the castles of our dreams;

NOT SO BAD.

We really have done pretty well this season so far as sport is con we really have done pretty well this season so far as sport is concerned. The Davis cup has stayed this side of the water, and our golfers and oarsmen have acquitted themselves well. The baseball season has been interesting and the coming football season promises many a pretty battle. At the tracks the horses and the bettors have had a lot of exercise.
In the lighter boxing divisions there has been considerable action and we have been shown that Wills can lick practically any member of the Jackson family. Dempsey has not displayed his wayers to any extent but that is not family. Dempsey has not displayed his wares to any extent, but that is not his fault. Every time Jack fixes up a match with somebody the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Prizefighters steps in and saves the

Of course Jack could fight Wills, but he doesn't wish to fight him for othing, and that match will take time to arrange. Don't let any one give you the idea that Dempsey is afraid of Wills. That's the bunk. But for business reasons that battle will not be held until next year.

the usual selection of all star elevens which have been omitted. We are perfectly aware that it is a joke for any man to try to pick an all America, or even an all Eastern or all Western team. We often have said that any such attempt was ridiculous. But that never detracted in the slightest from the enjoyment we got out of reading such selections.

A thing above all others which you thoroughly enjoy reading is an article on some subject of which you consider yourself sufficiently well informed to disagree with the author. There isn't a football fan in the country who doesn't think that he could pick a better all star eleven than any critic of the game. He therefore loves to read their selections in order to brag when he agrees with them and blame where he doesn't.

If we were to get together an eleven of last year's players to give any team of the coming season good and sufficient practice for its big games we would be satisfied with Swanson of Nebraska and Crisler of Chicago for ends Slater of Iowa and Stein of Washington and Jefferson for tackles, Schwab of Lafayette and Baer of Penn State for guards, Wallace of Ames for center, Devine of Iowa for quarterback and Aldrich of Yale, Kaw of Cornell and Owen of Harvard for the remainder of the back field.

It is interesting to note that on a single day last season it is estimated that there were 10,000 college players in uniform. We should like to know how many spectators watched games on that same afternoon

Yale may have quite a football game on its hands as early as September 30, when it meets Carnegie Tech at New Haven. Carnegie held Washington and Jefferson to 14 points last year and scored on Penn State.

The enthusiasm of our artist knows no bounds when it comes to our young men's suits for Fall!

Pictures you resolving at the breakfast table to make straight for our nearest store! Well, you won't be disappointed. It's our finest showing. Ever!

Scottish, English and American fabrics, tailored specially for young men. A variety of models-three button, also the four or high button. Some of them free and easy with soft rolling fronts; others a bit trimmer.

Not expensive.

*Solight soft hats! So soft. So light.

NEW YORK'S GREATEST AUTUMN ATTRACTION IN A BEAUTIFUL SETTING, THRILLING CONTESTS

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Detroit tightened its hold on third place with an 8 to 5 victory over Chicago to-day.

Robertson falled in the sixth after the White Sox seemingly had the game safe by a 5 to 2 margin and was relieved by Davenport, who was unable to check a batting rampage by the Tigers.

Cutshaw was ordered out of the game in the second inning for disputing a decision of Umpire Owens. The score:
